Europe's stock markets gained more ground in February, for the eighth month in a row. They have delivered very impressive performances year-to-date of over 7%, while the USA's markets have remained flat. The gains may appear linear on the surface, but the reality is quite different. The markets have moved erratically from one day to the next and performance gaps between sectors - and sometimes even between stocks within a same sector - have been very wide. The price momentum factor again performed very strongly.

The portfolio delivered a satisfactory performance in absolute terms but slightly underperformed its benchmark index. It outperformed sharply during the first two weeks of February, when the momentum factor had a relatively neutral influence on the market, but then lost this advantage as the factor became more important again and regained its role as a major performance driver for the stock markets.

The full-year earnings season is in full swing: investors were drawn to Nestle and Roche but smaller firms like Syensqo and Also Holding were heavily penalised.

Mandarine Equity Income selects European companies offering above average dividend yields or those that have raised / maintained their dividends year after year.
